

Poetry Dips Its Fingers In Every Colour

A data scientist's confession

The curiosity that drives both numbers and metaphor. Where poetry actually finds you.

NICHE

Poetry Doesn't Stay in Its Lane

- ✦ Not just literature classes and soft-cover journals
- ✦ Human experience refuses to be sorted
- ✦ The lyric form is the one that admits it

UNEXPECTED

It Finds You in the Technical

- ✦ Programmers call elegant code beautiful for a reason
- ✦ The best commit messages carry something real
- ✦ The boundary between technical and lyrical was always porous

ORDINARY

It Finds You in the Ordinary

- ✦ Monday, 7:14 AM — burnt toast scraped over the sink
- ✦ Poetry is ordinary experience seen clearly for one second
- ✦ The grey commute counts. The blue Tuesday counts.

GRIEF

It Finds You in Grief

- ✦ You don't miss 'a person' — you miss how they said your name
- ✦ Poetry holds specificity without resolving it
- ✦ That is not a small mercy

THE SIDEWAYS DOOR

It Finds You When You Stop Looking

- ✦ Poetry comes sideways, not in elevated moments
- ✦ A lyric heard forty times that suddenly means something different
- ✦ The door doesn't need to be wide — a crack is enough

THE REAL WORK

There's No Lesson. That's the Point.

- ✦ Poetry doesn't sharpen your frameworks
- ✦ It makes you someone who has stood inside a colour
- ✦ The poem finds you — your only job is to not keep the door entirely shut

The Tools Were Different

Poetry and data science are not opposites.

The curiosity was always the same.

Pretending they were cost something real.