

The Skill Behind Every Trusted Voice in the Room

Four moves to spot the unspoken truth, name it kindly, and check it's not just your ego talking.

NAME

DATE

PERSON / ROOM

1 Find Your Silent Room

- Recall meeting where all nodded, room felt tense underneath. What number, risk, truth did everyone see but nobody name?
- Whose glance or body language told real story that day?
- What silence cost team after — missed deadline, redo, blown launch?
- Write exact sentence you'd say with nerve: "The real number is closer to ____."

THE UNSAID THING

2 Check If It's the Junior Analyst Move

- Anyone whose struggle you're quietly fixing instead of naming?
- What story tell yourself about why silence feels "kinder" now?
- Stay unsaid 4 more months — what blindsided moment follows?
- What would "why did nobody tell me" sound like from them? Change urgency?

WHO YOU'RE PROTECTING

3 Draft the Sentence Using the Two Moves

- Shared-problem framing: swap "you didn't" for "we set this up wrong — can we look at what happened."
- Plain-and-owned version: "I'm going to say the thing nobody's saying, and I might be wrong: ____."
- Read both aloud. Which still true if you're wrong on details?
- Type final sentence into notes app now — not rehearsed in head.

YOUR DRAFT SENTENCE

4 Run the Ego Gut-Check

- Would you still want this said if you later learned you misread it?
- Any part about needing to be right, needing to win, needing credit?
- Quiet reluctant feeling vs loud urgent feeling — which is this, really?
- Name one moment last year you chased being right over being useful.

EGO OR WORK?