

The Inventory You Never Priced

Twenty minutes to name the generation lag, the education trade, and the ambition you caught instead of chose.

1 Map Your Generation Lag

- Name one topic where you outran your parents so fast a conversation now feels like a bad phone line.
- Write your last argument with a parent. Strip out blame — what's the real exposure gap underneath?
- Name the specific thing they built instead of running the race beside you.
- Does calling this structural, not personal change how angry you feel? One sentence, either way.

STRUCTURAL VS PERSONAL

2 Price What Your Education Actually Bought

- Finish it: "If I'd had a smaller education, I'd be happy with ____." Name the job, the street, the Sunday.
- Name one person who stayed small. Describe their ordinary Tuesday, in specifics.
- What door did your education open that you can never close again, even wishing you could?
- Would you trade the exposure back for the peace? Answer honestly — no resolution required.

THE TRADE NOBODY WARNS YOU

3 Trace Your Ambition Back to Its Source

- Before you caught your current ambitions, what was the one visible option you mistook for a calling?
- Name the first person who showed you an ambition you'd never been offered. What did it do to you that week?
- List two things nobody ever put in front of you as a kid — art, travel, a trade, a business.
- Is the goal you're chasing actually yours, or borrowed from someone you stood near at the right moment?

CAUGHT, NOT CHOSEN

4 Find the Love Underneath the Ambition

- Under the hustle — career, fitness, content — name the actual want: recognition, love returned, proving something to someone specific.
- Write about one time you gave love with open arms and it didn't come back. What wall went up after?
- Which of your walls still protect you, and which have outlived the threat that built them?
- What's your version of lyrics for songs that don't exist yet — where your unspent love actually goes?
