

The Silence Audit

Four questions to turn quiet into leverage, so your next sentence is the one nobody can afford to miss.

THIS WEEK'S MEETING

1 Find Your 'What Decision Does This Feed?' Moment

- Name your next meeting's real decision in one sentence — before it starts.
- Check your last opinion: did it feed that decision, or just add to the pile?
- Spot one recurring meeting where two projects wear the same words.
- Pick one fact you could pull beforehand that ends an argument before it starts.

DECISION ON THE TABLE

2 Run the Direction Test on Your Silence

- Recall a time you stayed quiet. Were you holding space, or protecting your comfort?
- Check the feeling after: relief means disappearing, intent means restraint.
- Name a time someone else got credit because you stayed quiet too long.
- Write the one sentence you should've said — even a few minutes late.

RELIEF OR INTENT?

3 Practice the 'What Do You Know?' Move

- Recall a time you were sure you were right and said so. What might What do you know that the data might not? have surfaced?
- Name one person whose pushback you've dismissed as anecdotal. What's one question you'd ask them instead?
- Think who could become an ally the same way that stakeholder did — asked, not corrected.

QUESTION, NOT CORRECTION

4 Audit What Your 'Yes' Is Worth

- When did you last say I don't know yet — let me sit with it instead of answering on the spot?
- Find one place to use what would have to be true for this to work? this week.
- Do people take your word at face value, or double-check it? What's driving that?
- Pick one meeting. Track the gap between what's discussed and the decision it's for — note what you saw.
