

The Quiet Habit Audit

Pick one small habit from the blog, run it for a week, and track exactly what it changes in how you feel and focus.

NAME

DATE

WEEK #

1 Diagnosis: Which Productivity Gap Are You Actually Experiencing?

- Physically done with work but mentally still spinning? Start with the Shutdown Ritual.
- Forgetting ideas mid-thought or losing track of what's next? Try the Brain Dump.
- Overwhelmed each morning, unsure what matters most? Eat one frog — only one.
- Name the real gap: closure, decision fatigue, mental clutter, open loops, or no visibility on what you've done.

YOUR GAP

2 Your Chosen Habit: Specific Implementation Plan

- Which ONE habit starts this week? Write it down — this is the commitment.
- Where and when does it happen? Be exact: time, place, pen and paper — no app.
- What's the smallest version you could do today? Shutdown = 2 minutes. Brain dump = one page.
- What stops you — friction, forgetfulness, or doubt? Name the barrier you'll remove.

THE COMMITMENT

3 Your First Week: Daily Contact Points

- Mon–Sun: did you do it? Note what you noticed about attention, mood, or how you felt after.
- Each habit is a moment of contact with how you spend attention — where did you feel that this week?

DAILY LOG

4 Define Your One Metric for This Week

- Pick ONE number that matters: rituals completed, pages written, blocks finished, frogs eaten, or days tracked.
- Write your metric and a realistic target — 5 out of 7 days is a solid start.
- End of week: did you hit it? What does that tell you about whether this habit is your right starting point?

THIS WEEK'S NUMBER